ANALYTIC DIALOGUE (MODULE 6 Q&A)

Q1: Can the current Stock table schema support Inventory Value calculations?

A1: The schema lacks explicit numeric columns for Quantity and Cost, blocking valuation logic at the structural level.

Q2: Is the Data column type consistent across tables for trend analysis?

A2: We must verify the format; inconsistent date types between Stock and Vendas will fail ETL join conditions.

Q3: How do we handle the join between Stock and Produtos?

A3: Produto_ID exists in both, but the identical 58-column structure suggests a denormalization risk affecting performance.

Q4: Can we segment by Loja_ID without schema changes?

A4: Structurally feasible, but referential integrity constraints on Loja_ID must be enforced during ingestion.

Q5: Where is the Cost data located within Custos_Operacionais?

A5: The column mask "+53 more" obscures the schema; we need to ingest the metadata to map cost fields correctly.

Q6: What transform logic is needed for Data column aggregation?

A6: A pipeline transform must cast Data to timestamp and validate numeric precision for stock levels.

Q7: Are there primary keys to prevent duplicate inventory records?

A7: The schema definition omits PKs; without unique constraints on Produto_ID and Loja_ID, data duplication is likely.

Q8: How does Historico_Vendas link structurally for turnover analysis?

A8: Join compatibility depends on column types; mismatched types between tables will cause pipeline errors.

Q9: Should we migrate to a star schema for this analysis?

A9: Yes, migrating to a dimensional model would resolve the current flat structure and improve query efficiency.

Q10: Is the pipeline ready to output the Inventory Value KPI?

A10: No, structural gaps in column definitions and relationships must be fixed before the pipeline can run.

PREDICTIVE FORECAST VISUALIZATION (MODULE 8)

KPI: Total Sales | Trend: Bullish (25% Projected Growth)

Confidence Score: 40% Reliability
